ILUCIDARE SPECIAL PRIZES

During the editions 2020 and 2021 of the European Heritage Awards / Europa Nostra Awards, two ILUCIDARE Special Prizes per year will be awarded (one for cultural heritage-led innovation and one for cultural heritage-led diplomacy) as part of the Horizon 2020⁷ project with the same name that promotes heritage as a resource for innovation and international cooperation. It aims to make heritage-led innovation and diplomacy in Europe an example for sustainable development and international cooperation through diverse collaborative actions.

The dedicated website of ILUCIDARE is <https://ilucidare.eu/>

The winners of these prizes will be selected from among the submitted eligible entries to the four categories of the European Heritage Awards / Europa Nostra Awards. There will be no overlap of winners of the European Heritage Awards / Europa Nostra Awards and the winners of the ILUCIDARE Special Prizes.

Areas covered

Heritage-led innovation:

Heritage-led innovation builds on the implementation of a cutting-edge idea or method that results in an improvement for users. The basis of the innovation process is new knowledge, which is often an intersecting of disciplines and needs. The innovation is either tested by the practitioners and larger society, or is ready for a larger upscaling towards the market.

The applications for ILUCIDARE can include new services, networks or training, cutting-edge products, business or governance models, techniques, signature processes or new heritage-led commodities such as branding or narratives. The scope of the applications can include economic, social, technological, ecological or legal innovations.

Applications for ILUCIDARE can consider three categories of heritage-led innovation, taking into account the diverse roles heritage can play in relation to innovation as well as its interaction with other sectors:

1. Heritage-driven innovation: innovations that are based on the specific needs of heritage assets (due to their unique values, materials, design techniques or characteristics) and also become available for other sectors.
2. Assimilation of innovation: innovations developed in other fields or sectors that can be applied to heritage assets in order to generate knowledge, new uses, improvement of preservation, enhance decision-making or support their management
3. Heritage as resource: Heritage at large or specific heritage assets generate new ideas or knowledge, are the basis for innovation processes or kick-start new interdisciplinary and cross-sectoral collaborations leading to innovation in various fields.

Heritage-led diplomacy:

Heritage-led diplomacy and international cooperation build on the relevance of heritage and of shared past heritage to foster international cultural relations, peace building, reconciliation, social cohesion, multicultural dialogue, better mutual understanding, human and economic development across nations and communities. Not only involving governmental actors at all levels (national, regional and local), heritage-led diplomacy also includes a broader array of non-state stakeholders such as individuals, entrepreneurs and NGOs, operating for instance in architectural preservation, social development or post-disaster reconstruction. Heritage-led diplomacy is therefore about multidimensional and multi-stakeholders cultural exchanges, beyond states and international bodies.

Applications to ILUCIDARE can consider two main types of heritage-led diplomacy:

1. Heritage-driven diplomacy whereby heritage and its governance are put at the centre of diplomatic processes, recognising their broader political, social, cultural and economic impacts for bi and multilateral relations, transnational cooperation and reconciliation.

⁷ Horizon 2020 is the EU Framework Programme for Research and Innovation

2. Heritage within diplomacy whereby the preservation of heritage acts as a political tool in state-led foreign policy or locally-led initiatives, in the context of promoting better mutual understanding and exchanges or conflict resolution and recovery in developing countries.

The applications for ILUCIDARE are encouraged to highlight ongoing partnerships between several countries.
